JURY DECIDES CURET DID NOT DROWN GEORGE

Marine Released From Drives Commissioner Convention Committee Custody on the Coroner's Order.

Worked to Save the Boy Until He Had to Quit Because of Exhaustion.

Adrian Curet, the marine who failed in his attempt to save young Clarence George from drowning at Smoot's wharf was afterward held by the police upon the complaint of Mr. Thompson, George's stepfather, who alleged that Curet had pushed the boy overboard, was promptly acquitted by the jury at the Coro-rer's inquest held at the new morgue this morning. Curet was discharged

It was brought out through witnesses that Curet and George, with a number of friends, went to Smoot's wharf to bathe. George could not swim very well, and asked Curet to look after him, which Curet promised to do. The boy which Curet promised to do. The boy which Curet promised to do. The boy wither turned or fell overheard and teams, and would try to induce the relief either jumped or fell overboard and went under. As soon as he came to the surface Curet dived after him and made earnest attempts to save him, but the tide was strong, and George struggled so hard in his fight that both were carried out from shore.

Finally when a rowboat reached them Curet was so completely exhausted that he had to be pulled out of the water. Witnesses Heard.

The first witness called by Deputy Coroner Glazebrook was Dr. R. W. Baker, acting Deputy Coroner, who examined the body of George. Dr. Baker said he found the usual evidences of death by drowning. There were no signs as Curet was accused of. He had not been drinking.

Curet has an interesting record. He has been commended for bravery upon a number of occasions. Congress voted him a medal of honor for his conduct at Tientsin, where he saw service with the allied forces. Curet was one of those who brought Capt. Harry Leonard, of the Marine Corps, off the field when his arm was shot off.

Has Too Few Cars.

It is understood that the railroad con ends that the fertilizer company does tends that the fertilizer company does not own enough garbage cars for the work of hauling the garbage out of the city. The point is made that, if more cars were provided, not so much promptness would be required in getting them back to Washington.

Warner Stutier, Superintendent of the Street Cleaning Department, says he is overrun with complaints about the garbage service. The people telephone him about it at his office and at his residence.

Commissioner West said the company was fined last month $386 for poor ser-vice. The rate of fine is $1 for each neglect to carry away the garbage on time.
